Crisis Fund Account: outside of a 501(c)(3)

What is the Employee Benefit?

Employers create a fund where employees can donate money to other employees struck by a personal hardship or crisis. This version of the Crisis Fund Account is taxable (no IRS restrictions). That means there are less restrictions on how the donated funds are distributed and to whom. Employees can help any designated individual suffering a crisis or personal hardship. So while there are not tax advantages, it is a simple and easy (even anonymous, if desired) way for employees to help their peers.

Employees apply to receive grant monies from their employer through the Crisis Fund Account. If approved, the employer initiates disbursement of those funds to the employee to be used for personal purchases.

Things to Know:

Plan Design	Employers determine who gets the funds, how much, and when.
Eligible Expenses	Funds can be used for any expenses the recipient deems necessary.
Limits	Employers can set any limit they want for the plan year such as a maximum amount that can be reimbursed to an employee for the year. Since it is a non-tax advantaged plan, the guidelines are relaxed, employer can set any limit.
Eligibility Requirements	Any employee is eligible to participate and apply to receive a grant from the crisis fund.
Funding	Employer and employee funded
Enrollment	Employees can be enrolled at any time by the employer upon approving an employee to receive funds from the Crisis Fund Account.
Disbursements	Once an employee's application is approved and funds shared, the employee will receive funds in their crisis account to be used for any type of purchase or expense.
Tax Benefit	The funds donated to the receiving employee are considered taxable income. No tax implications to the employee or the employer if the grant fits the definition of a crisis or hardship in the Internal Revenue Code.
